The travel study course begins in Lima with two weeks in Cusco, Machu Pichu, Puno (Indigenous Floating Island communities of Uros and Taquile located on Lake Titicaca). Students will examine the comparisons and contrasts of Indigenous and cross cultural experiences that can enrich perspectives in education, and other interrelated disciplines.

Through readings, story work, field visits with peoples/archeological/communities, observational skills, engaging with community leaders/scholars and traditional ceremonies and education, students will learn about the historical to present Indigenous-Modern relationships; ways that lived experiences of past peoples/ancestors' artefacts and knowledges are repatriated for current Indigenous inspired aspirations within Peruvian context; archeological sites and the richness of knowledges; selected Indigenous cultures lived expressions of language, culture, and economy in Peru; and e) the ongoing themes and issues that challenge traditional knowledges and examine models of re-engagement with Indigenous perspectives. In addition we will visit Indigenous communities and learn how they engage with their Indigenous knowledges in present lifeways and discuss ways these connect to Canadian Indigenous perspectives. Students will review literature that addresses Indigenous knowledges and perspectives on Indigenous repatriation, language renewal, cultural reclaiming, culturally relevant teaching and research practices and theories. Local university student mentors will work with us to be our 'eyes, ears, and voices'.
